

I would like to register opposition to the CBA's attempt to weaken the Indiana "No Call" law.

The following statement is made both as a consumer and a businessman: There are sufficient provisions for legitimate businesses to contact their customers for legitimate purposes. The State law prohibits the use of these legitimate means to be used as an excuse for making solicitations over the phone if the number is on the "no call list".

Even with the law in place there are still far too many unwanted phone solicitations occurring. Do not relax these provisions. I do not desire to have any business calling me to sell me things I have no interest in. If I'm shopping, I'll find them.
